RECOVERY OHIO

Mike DeWine has been leading the fight against the drug epidemic since he first took office, using a multi-faceted approach of law enforcement, community outreach and education. Last year, he introduced a 12-point comprehensive action plan to help Ohio overcome the drug problem we are facing.

Additionally, Attorney General Mike DeWine was one of the first Attorney Generals in the country to file a lawsuit against five drug manufacturers alleging that these companies systematically lied to the medical community about whether their products were addictive in order to make billions of dollars selling opioids to Ohioans.

Point 1: Pass legislation to give the Governor the ability to declare a public health emergency statewide or in specific areas. The Governor should have more flexibility and tools to face this emergency, including the ability to do the following:

- Distribute money and other resources to local entities that are facing unexpected emergency conditions, like overdose spikes.
- Create an accelerated process for state licenses in critical professions such as the medical or social work fields as well as expedited licensing reciprocity with other states.

Point 2: Create a 21st Century law enforcement data infrastructure. This will allow real-time, statewide data-sharing and brings state-of-the-art data analytics and crime prediction to every Ohio law enforcement agency.

Point 3: Expand proven drug task force models. This will specifically target and disrupt the flow of money and drugs from Mexican drug cartels.

Point 4: Create at least 60 more specialized drug courts. Drug courts are a proven way to hold those with substance use disorder accountable and ensure participation in effective drug treatment. There are more than 20 counties without a drug court and hundreds of municipalities without one.

Point 5: Implement Proven K-12 grade drug prevention education in all Ohio schools.

The single most effective tool Ohio has in this fight is prevention, and our best opportunity to provide it is to require that every student in Kindergarten through 12th grade receive age- and environmentally appropriate, evidence-based substance use prevention education.

Point 6: Double substance use treatment capacity in Ohio. According to a new study by The Ohio State University, Ohio has treatment capacity for only 20 to 40 percent of Ohioans suffering from opioid addiction. The shortage is even worse in poor and rural areas of the state. Utilizing funding from the drug companies who made billions of dollars creating this problem, Ohio must develop, incentivize or repurpose treatment options to double our treatment capacity. This can be accomplished in a number of ways, including:

- Better utilizing Ohio hospitals' existing capacity. We have existing capacity in Ohio at the hundreds of hospitals around the state. However, current funding mechanisms or rules don't allow most of that capacity to be used for treatment.
- Driving more money to local addiction and mental health boards to pay for new treatment. By block-granting millions of additional dollars to local Alcohol, Drug and Mental Health boards, treatment and recovery providers can expand most where they're needed and be more responsive to local needs.

Point 7: Expand workforce of critical specialists. Ohio has a shortage of addiction specialists, social workers, and other professionals who are needed now and, in the future, to help those with substance use disorder. To incentivize these workers, Ohio should develop a student loan forgiveness program for those in drug treatment fields who complete their studies at Ohio universities and spend a specified time working in the addiction field in Ohio.

Point 8: Empower employers to help employees with substance abuse disorder to seek treatment while remaining employed. Working through the Bureau of Workers Compensation (BWC) Safety Grants program, Ohio should create a pilot project aimed at existing employees who are willing to go to their employer and acknowledge that they have a substance use problem. To keep that person in the job, BWC's program would work with the employer to pay for a portion of the healthcare costs associated with an appropriate treatment program that would allow that employee to return to work when they're drug free.

Point 9: Help business owners hire employees in recovery by offering employers incentives and reducing risks. The BWC should start a pilot project incentivizing employers to hire applicants who have completed appropriate treatment programming. The pilot program would reimburse the employer for a certain percent of the employee's wages, provide necessary training to the employee, and indemnify the employer from any BWC rate increases should the employee relapse and cause a work-related accident.

Point 10: Roll-out a statewide drug prevention media campaign.

Point 11: Create a special position reporting directly to the Governor. This position will work every day with the single-minded focus of fighting the opioid epidemic.

Point 12: Expand early intervention programs that target Ohio families and children in foster care. Ohio should expand and extend to all 88 counties quality programs that emphasize intervention with the whole family such as Ohio START (Sobriety, Treatment and Reducing Trauma). This is an 18-county pilot program that helps local governments offer concentrated, critical services to not only those who struggle with substance use disorder, but to their children who find themselves in foster care and are equally traumatized and damaged by opioids.

- ACTION: Ask this Laurie Dawson to convene a state-wide Task Force assembly. (Jerry Craig)
- ACTION: Jerry Craig will reach out to Laurie Dawson in January 2019 to reintroduce SCOATF
- Medicaid is looking for a new director
